

About Sinfonia for Brass Quintet

The form of the piece is sonata allegro form, a miniature "symphony" for brass. The general quartal harmonic style is chords based on intervals of a fourth rather than triadic harmony (chords based on intervals of a third). This type of harmony was used most extensively by twentieth century German composer Paul Hindemith. The first movement opens with a small "homage" to Hindemith by using the same first four notes as the last movement (March) from his Symphonic Metamorphosis. The first movement contains the standard exposition, development, and recapitulation sections. The second movement is a typical slow movement and the Sinfonia concludes with a lively rondo.
